THE DAY MY EGO RAISED ITS HEAD!

I was flying home from my recent trip, trying to mind my own business, but I couldn't help it. I overheard the lady in front of me talking to another passenger. She seemed to be near my age...had a couple of grandchildren, like me. She whipped out her laptop and was busy typing when the conversation began. She started talking about her publisher. She had a book on Amazon, and was excitedly explaining how she was quitting her job, in two weeks, ready to embark on a new career. She had some book signings scheduled, and would soon be traveling across the United States.

I wanted to be happy. I did. But I'll admit it...I felt that twinge of jealousy raise its head. I felt a lump in my throat and tears welled in my eyes. "Why not me?" I wondered. My life's passion has always been about writing and publishing, but I have always managed to sabotage my best efforts. I know my writing is my gift, and yet, I have not been able to accomplish the thing I most want. Life just isn't fair.

Before my self-pity rooted too deeply, I realized I was on the verge of another sabotage session! I stopped to remember it was nothing more than the ego, always looking for some reason to separate from the "other." When we fortify the ego with thoughts of "poor me," it only serves to draw attention to the victim identity. But that is not who I choose to be! Rather than feel jealous of her achievement, I could choose to feel gratitude. She demonstrated the possibility of doing exactly what it is I want to do. Quickly, I began to feel like celebrating, instead. What a wonderful thing she has been able to do, and because she has done this, so can I. My jealousy and pity evolved into graciousness and joy.

How easy it is to look at what others have accomplished, and feel jealous and upset! And yet, we can choose to see this as "possibility demonstrated," and then move toward achieving our own goals. There is truly more than enough for all of us. What one of us demonstrates is possible becomes possible for all of us. Next time I feel the ego starting to emerge in ideas of separation, I will remember the lady on the plane.

I hope her book is successful! If it is, that means mine will be, also. When my book is published, I will share my success with you.

BACK TO CONNECTICUT

Shhhhhhh.....In case you haven't heard...

Seven of the ten original participants in the Try It On Everything movie were recently reunited in Bethel, CT. It was so great to see everyone, again!! I was thrilled to see how great they looked. We spent a Sunday afternoon, sitting around a dining room table, talking about how our lives had been impacted by the four-day event of October 2007. I don't want to tell you too much about it, but just know what was shared is going to deeply touch and amaze everyone. The reunion update will be added to the second edition of the DVD, but those who have already purchased the movie will not miss out. If you already bought the DVD, you will be given an online link so you will also have access to this special addition. I am not sure how long it will take them to edit this portion, but I'll let you know when I hear anything. Look out, Oprah, here we come!! (We are all holding this intention, together. Want to join us?)
