GOD IS I AM and The Secret

I thought you might enjoy reading an excerpt from my unpublished book. I chose this particular passage because it is very current. I often tease that, no, I actually am not stealing from “The Secret,” but have been teaching these same principles for many years, prior to even hearing this idea was called the Law of Attraction. I applaud those who teach this principle, and there are many who do. I don't think that should be too surprising...as there appears to be a universal awakening unfolding. Anyway...without further ado, this passage comes from the chapter I've titled, “Examining the Truth of Universal Laws.”

If we could consider that everything that “is” came from Divine Consciousness, we might start to also consider that what happens to us in life (and even after what we perceive to be the end of it) is very much in our control, after all.

While the Law of Attraction is all-the-rage, at this time, due to the movie and book “The Secret,” we need to understand that this principle is not a new one. Even though a select few have known about this for centuries, most people had no idea such a concept existed. When the movie clarified and distributed the information, millions flocked to see what the buzz was all about, but unfortunately, many of them didn't understand it fully.

I saw, early on, that people of many faiths embraced it, only to be told, down the road, that these ideas were in contradiction to the religious teachings of their church. If they had been excited, initially, now they were ashamed of their own curiosity. What I remind my followers is that this isn't so much a religious principle as it is a scientific one. However, when you combine spiritual evidence with scientific fact, you get the most amazing results!

Y*ou can decide that gravity is not in alignment with your religious beliefs, but that is not really going to change the law, is it? The same holds true with the Law of Attraction. Choose to believe or choose not to believe...either way, the principle is unchanged. I would guess the secular communities would say the same thing about God.*

I first started to pick up on the negative press towards the movie, "The Secret," just as the teachers and author appeared on Oprah's show. Some felt the movie was taking away the sovereign power of God, and giving it to a magical genie who served man. In the movie, the term "The Universe" was often used, rather than the word God. I felt this was done so as not to alienate people of any particular secular philosophy. Too many westerners think that everyone calls our creative source "God." That simply is not true. Thus, in order to embrace a larger audience, the term "The Universe" was used. However, off and on, the teachers alternated between the two terms, God and Universe. Clearly, they were interchangeable.

A*dditionally, the term "The Universe" implies there is a field that is responding to our desires. No matter what we call that field, if we believe that God is infinite, we must logically conclude that field is within God. Therefore, God and The Universe are the same thing. Everything is of God.*

I heard arguments that God/Universe/Consciousness was depicted as nothing more than a servant to mankind. There were a few who thought the movie was teaching that man is the master of God and God is at the mercy of our demands. This requires a great deal more explanation, but in order to see the beauty of how this works, we must first agree that God is all. If that is so, then all has already been given to us. God is the one and only Creator. However, the vast majority of All That

Is is formless—not particles and not waves of energy. Through us, things are “thought into” the experience of being.

There are countless possibilities that remain in the non-physical, formless realm. For example, not all poems have been written, not all inventions have been invented and not all symphonies have been heard. The words, the concepts, and the musical notes are there, but by putting them in a particular sequence, new creations will come to be. All possibilities have always existed, because there is nothing outside of all, and yet, much remains formless.

If we understand life is not randomly happening, but is evidence of our thoughts and feelings, we can then use that information to bring about better results. Do you now understand that using the Law of Attraction is not blasphemy? Yes, God created all and God is in complete control of everything. That includes us. Why? Because God is the Beingness of All That Is. We, as God, experiencing the form of being humans, have free will to select which possibilities we want to express through our mortal adventure. Free will gives us the power to choose what we want to experience, so in that sense, we can put out our wishes to the “genie”...or to the field or the Consciousness I spoke of earlier. God, through us, responds. Whatever we call this Creator makes no difference. It is the same thing.

In The Bible, it clearly states that is is God's good pleasure to give us the kingdom...and we inherited this kingdom upon our birth. This kingdom is in the midst of us, even now. The question remains, “Do we have eyes to see?” Knowing God is Love, we can stand firm in our pursuit of that which brings goodness into our lives. This is in alignment with the principles of Love. The Law of Attraction was designed as a means to accomplish this. Why should we be ashamed to use this principle? We don't feel ashamed to use electricity or gravity, do we? It comes from the same source—God! It always has been here, but only in recent years did we start to understand how we can benefit from the purposeful application of these gifts.

Rather than resist changes in our beliefs, we should embrace them as graduation gifts of our growth. Nothing is static in this energetic experience...nor should it be. With so many possibilities still without form, why would we want to deny ourselves the magnificent gift laying at our feet? The Law of Attraction is a part of our inheritance—a treasure only recently discovered in the attic of our human awareness.
